Rural, Northern, & Aboriginal Health

Factors Influencing Access to Health Care Services in Labrador

with Gioia Montevecchi, BSc (Hons), MSc Medicine

The Newfoundland and Labrador Centre for Applied Health Research invites you to join us on May 8, 2013 at 12:30pm for the next meeting of our Research Exchange Group on Rural, Northern and Aboriginal Health. Gioia Montevecchi will share her Master's research about factors that create challenges accessing health care services and strategies for overcoming them as reflected in the experiences of health care administrators, providers, and community members in two distinct regions of Labrador: the five northern isolated communities within Nunatsiavut, the land claims region of the Labrador Inuit, and Happy Valley Goose Bay, a multi-cultural community in the Upper Lake Melville region of Labrador.

This Research Exchange Group meets quarterly to discuss research in progress, review funding opportunities, and to explore possible collaboration on research projects. The group also provides a forum where students, researchers, policy makers and members of the general public can meet to discuss issues related to rural, northern and aboriginal health. All are welcome. Teleconferencing is available for remote guests. RSVP Rochelle.baker@med.mun.ca
